TODAY'S MESSAGE

To go forward without stumbling, we must have the assurance that a hand all-powerful will hold us up, and an infinite pity will be exercised toward us if we fall.

-- Ellen White, Sons & Daughters of God, p. 154.

If we believe that we lose our justification in Christ each time we sin, we completely invalidate the truth of justification by faith.

Such a concept is based on the idea that we are justified because of our obedience--what Christ is doing in us--and not because of what He has already accomplished for us by His doing and dying on the cross.

Such an idea makes the gospel good advice instead of good news.

-- Jack Sequeira, Beyond Belief, p. 104.

The conclusion to which we find ourselves being led is that the New Testament knows the possibility of failure to persevere...and warns against it, but it emphasizes the greater possibility of a confidence in God and a continuing faith which, as it is sustained by God, is preserved from fear and from falling... We can say firmly that, while it is possible for a Christian to fail to persevere after a genuine experience of salvation, yet, with all the promises of a faithful God to sustain those who trust in Him, the main emphasis of the New Testament is on confidence and assurance of final salvation.

-- I. Howard Marshall, Kept by the Power of God, pp. 206-207.
